

Cross-Pollinate Consulting

Communications/ Research Internship, Fall 2017 and/or Spring 2018

Interested in international media development, digital rights advocacy, and communications for social change? Please consider working for Cross-Pollinate Consulting as an intern. Cross-Pollinate is run by Susan Abbott, a Denver-based independent consultant, and works on international development projects that have a media, communication or internet rights related dimension. Cross-Pollinate works with NGOs, donors and academic institutions on international development and advocacy projects related to advancing and protecting freedom of expression, access to information, and understanding how information and communication technology is impacting development goals and outcomes.

The internship will consist of the following: 1) Work with Cross-Pollinate Director on communications and outreach 2) Provide backstopping assistance for small consulting practice 3) provide research assistance on media and journalism in developing countries and fragile states 4) Contribute to a blog and curate online resources about media assistance, foreign aid, and why media/communication matters to international development goals.

If this sounds like a good fit for you, please send me an email with your resume/ CV, 2 references, and a very short cover letter that outlines your interest in development. Internship is based at the Posner Center for International Development. It is highly preferable that interested candidates are self-motivated, creative, and can commit to one or two days a week for a 6-month period. Experience with WordPress, Wix, or other similar platform is helpful.

Please send your expression of interest to susanabbott1@gmail.com.
